5. Clan Gunn Genealogy - Dr. Colin Gunn - taken from the Clan Gunn Herald,1998

(a) Definition

- *An attempt to record all persons of the name of GUNN found in..
The Old Parish records of Scotland, from their beginnings to 1854.
Gunn in some of the decennial censuses fro 1841, 1851, 1861.
Death certificates for all Gunn deaths 1855 to 1882.
Mormon microfiches to 1875, census information, and other sources including member's family trees.
- *The OPR's record very few deaths, their starting dates vary widely; in some there are considerable gaps.
- *Deaths / burials are mainly taken from the work on graveyard inscriptions for Caithness and Sutherland, carried out by Misses Cowper and Ross.

(b) For each person the following are given, where known - Name; Place; Born/Baptized; Married; Died; Notes...

- *In most cases, it is the baptisms which is recorded, and there are few recorded birth dates.
- *For marriages, the dates are mostly the dates when the banns were read out in church, not the date of marriage. Also banns are often read out in two separate parishes, if the couple lived in 2 separate parishes.
- *A great deal of additional information has turned up in the course of recording - age, address, occupation, cause of death...
- *It now gives an indication to the demographic, medical and military history of Scotland over 2 centuries, including the obvious loss of population caused by the Clearances, the many regiments of Scottish soldiers raised to fight in the French revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars (Chelsea / army pensioners), and the sharp deterioration of the people's health in the cities, induced by the Industrial Revolution.
- *The surname GUNN is spelt differently, depending on the date when the original record was made.
.....Early entries are usually "GUN", later ones "GUNN".
.....Early entries in Highland parishes are occasional spelt "GUIN" or "GUINE", the Gaelic spelling.
- *Sept genealogy has not been studied.

7. Note...

- (a)Dr. Colin Gunn, Clan Gunn Herald, 1998...

"Before the compulsory registration of births, marriages and deaths in Scotland in 1855, baptism and marriage contracts were recorded by the Church of Scotland, and were frequently defective. Many parish records were started very late, the classic example being Kildonan, started only in 1790, condemning many McHarmish Gunns to permanent genealogical obscurity. Some parishes reveal great gaps of up to 10 consecutive for example, Thurso & Latheron. The loss is greater than 10 missing years because later entries do not connect.

Why so poor ? Well, Scotland was a poor country. Few graves had headstones. Highland parishes were huge, for example Kildonan, Durness and Latheron. Each had only one minister of religion, with little or no storage facilities for the precious records which were attacked by damp and rodents. And a few were just lost.

And it was only in 1855, with the start of compulsory registration of births, deaths and marriages and death, and the appointment of a paid official registrar for every parish, that accurate registration began. Even so, for years afterwards, some events went unrecorded, especially in the industrial cities. English registration began in 1837. Scottish registration was delayed by 18 years because Scottish legislation required separate bills..."

- (c) The Kirk Session Accounts Books have been filmed - the originals at present are in Caithness - the films are in The Scottish Records Office. Available in Mormon Libraries ??

- (d) The "Mort-clott" was borrowed from the Kirk Session to cover the coffin as it was being carried to the grave. Sometimes a bell man tolled a hand bell, walking in front of a funeral procession. The bell was kept for he purpose by the Kirk Session and a fee charged for its use. If people could not afford to pay , sometimes the money would be given out of the "poors fund" for the use of the bell and the cloth. Not all parishes list the names of the people paying the fees in their accounts. Often it is just a figure entry for the mort clott and no names mentioned. Read - Margaret Bennet - "Scottish Customs - From The Cradle to the Grave", 1992, Polygon, Edinburgh.

Census - The First Canisbay Parish Statistical Report (1791)

“Origin of the Name

It is not known that the parish ever had any other name, than what it now bears. Canisbay has been supposed by some to have been originally written Canonsbay; others conjecture it to have some connection with the Latin vocable Canis. It is, however, more probable, that Canute's - Bay was its first appellation, in honour of the arrival of some Norwegian chief of the name of Canute. There is indeed no account of the descent of such a chief upon the coast, nor is there any bay in the parish now denominated Canisbay. But as all the places of the least note in the parish, are clearly of Norwegian derivation, it cannot be supposed, that the name of the district itself should be an exception.

Situation and Extent

The parish of Canisbay being the most northern land in the island of Great Britain, is situated in the latitude of 58 45', about 2 degrees of W. longitude from London. The figure of the parish is remarkable for its regularity, exhibiting, to the eye the exact quadrant of a circle, the arch of which divides it from the neighbouring parishes towards the land, and the two containing sides from the seas that wash its coasts; Dungisbay Head is in the vertex of this quadrant, from which the coast stretches in a straight direction due S and due W till it meets with Wick parish on one hand, and Dunnet on the other. Each of these lines may be reckoned 8 English miles in extent. The whole occupy about 50 square miles or upwards.

Soil, Surface, etc

Canisbay is rather a level than a hilly district. The Warth Hill is of considerable height and magnitude, and is the only one in the parish deserving the name. The Loch of Mey is about 2 scotch miles in circumference. There is no river, and only a few rivulets (the chief of which is the Burn of Freswick) in the whole parish. A single stone (sea-rock excepted) of any considerable magnitude, is no where to be seen above the surface of the earth.

There are mineral and fresh water springs in abundance. The former are all of the chalybeate kind. There is one of excellent quality near the old castle of Freswick. Heath in general prevails, where agriculture has not reached. There are, however, considerable tracts of green pasture land, in different districts of the parish, which require only the advantages of cultivation to be made productive. A light black loam with an intermixture of moss, is, where cultivation prevails, the general character of the soil. The rest is entirely moss, reaching, in some places down to the sea brink, and yielding peats in the greatest abundance, and of as good quality as any in the kingdom. The lands about Mey, belonging to the Earl of Caithnes, have an intermixture of clay.

Climate

The climate is distinguished by variable, rather than tempestuous weather. Remote from the mountains, which attract moisture and occasion rain, fair weather is not unusual. The winters are generally mild and open, frosts are seldom intense, or of long continuance. The snow never thickens to any depth, and the coast is scarcely sprinkled by it, while in more inland parishes it lies to a considerable depth. The level situation of the parish, and the sea surrounding it on every side but one, may be regarded as the causes of this temperature. The summers in Canisbay, for the same reason, are temperately cool; and high winds are, in general, more prevalent than heavy rains. The Aurora Borealis begins to exhibit itself about the middle of harvest. In no part of Britain is it to be seen to more advantage. At times, from the shifting brilliancy of its vivid coruscations, the whole heavens seem to be in motion; at other times a settled bloody tinge prevails over all the sky; and on these occasions, the whole phenomenon appears truly awful and magnificent. All its appearances seem to prove that it is the effect of electricity.

Longevity and Diseases

There are few districts where more good health is enjoyed than in Canisbay. The inhabitants in general live to a good old age. There are several at present in the parish betwixt 90 and 100. Many die at an advanced age, without the recollection of a day's illness in the course of their lives. The most prevalent elnesses among the people, are those arising from obstructed perspiration, owing to the variableness of the weather, and perhaps still more, to the raw and unwholesome vapours transfused into the atmosphere they breathe, from the extensive tracts of fen, muir and moss in their vicinity, while colds, coughs, and rheumatisms are not unfrequent. Fevers prevail as little here, perhaps, as in any corner of the world. Inoculation is not yet in general practice; but though few escape the small pox, the disease is seldom mortal. Indeed, most other diseases are extremely rare. Few parishes, therefore, give less trouble or emolument to physicians, than Canisbay.

Population

There are 382 families in the parish, including those in the island of Stroma. The number of males is 881, and of females 1069, total 1950. The return to Dr Webster in 1755, was only 1481 souls. The population has therefore increased 469 within these 40 years. The advancement of civilization, the free enjoyment of property, a better cultivated soil, the multiplicity of families on small farms, and more extensive employment in fishing and the other maritime occupations, may be considered as the operative forces of this increase. As these causes acquire additional energy, proportional effects may be expected. Were the waste grounds cultivated, and some little branches of manufacture established, the yearly produce of the soil, and the number of souls in the parish, might amount to a third more, than what they now are. The following list shews the number of births, deaths, and marriages, for the last 4 years.

Years	Births	Deaths	Marriages
1787	65	19	12
1788	70	23	13
1789	66	18	12
1790	73	27	16

Rents and Proprietors

The whole valued rent of the parish amounts to 3855L 3s 6d Scotch. The real rent may be computed at about 1300L Sterling. From 1200 to 1500 bolls of victual are yearly exported, besides maintaining the inhabitants. Land is divided into what are called penny lands, halfpenny lands, farthing lands and octos. Eight octos are reckoned equal to 12 acres. The rent of an acre, at an average, is not below a guinea. In some places it is 30s or upwards. The Earl of Caithness, Robert Sinclair, Esq of Freswick, and the family of Brabster, are the only proprietors in the parish. Brabster is an inland property, lying in the centre of the district. All the other cultivated lands are situated on the coast, extending, at an average, about half an English mile from the shore. There are also frequent interjections of moss and moor, reaching down to the sea coast, and dividing one cultivated district from another. Hence it is apparent, how small a proportion of this extensive parish is as yet brought into cultivation.

Cultivation and Produce

The medium extent of farms does not exceed the sum of 9l Sterling yearly rent. By this multiplicity of families, the soil is brought up to the highest pitch of cultivation. - Oats and barley, in alternate crops, with the addition of some flax and potatoes, are the sole objects of agriculture. The soil, at an average, yields about 5 returns of oats, and above 7 of barley; but in some particular spots, no less than 11 returns of barley have been reaped. From Martinmas till spring, the dung of the cattle is left in the byre; a bedding of dry earth or peat mold is thrown above it every day, which mixes with the dung, and, at the same time, keeps the cattle warm and dry. A cart load of this compost is reckoned more valuable as a manure, than three of pure dung, particularly, if thrown out and exposed to the weather through the winter; but the principle manure along the coast, is tang or sea ware ; it comes ashore in the greatest abundance during the spring months, when it is most needed. A wind blowing from the land brings the ware from the sea. This manure is solely appropriated to the barley crop. It is a powerful cleanser of the soil, coalesces with it in the shortest space, exerts and exhausts its nutritive virtues in the nourishment of one crop. In whatever manner it is laid upon the field, it is a manure of the first estimation. Dung-hills consisting of earth and ware, of 6 or 12 month's standing, seem the most eligible preparation of this valuable manure for the soil. From the constant use of sea-ware, as a manure, along with the constituent qualities of the soil, the cultivated lands in most parts of the parish, are as fine and friable as garden mould, and are cultivated in general with less strength, than, comparatively speaking, is found requisite in other places of the county. The soil being perfectly clear of latent rock, the plough is made of the slightest construction; and, in general, both plough and cattle do not exceed 10l Sterling in value.

Oats are begun to be sown about the first week of April. and barley about the 12th of May, nor is the season gone for the sowing of the latter so late as the 21st of June. Harvest begins about the 1st of September. and is in general finished in the course of a month. Gray and black oats are the common growth of the parish, as they are over all Caithness. They unquestionably accord better with the soil and climate, than the white oats. The latter is not only a greater robber of the soil, but is far more liable to shake in harvest, than the former. Bread of the white oats is stronger, and perhaps somewhat fairer, but by no means superior in taste and mellowness. A man servant gets little short of 3l Sterling per annum, and a woman half as much. Day labourers are seldom employed They may be had at about 9d per day without victuals. Mason and joiner work is fully higher than in any part of Scotland. Carts are in common use throughout the parish.

Proposed Improvements

As neither inclosures nor winter herding, have as yet taken place, green crops are of course unattended to, among the common people. The proprietors and gentlemen, whose attention is directed to farming, carry on their operations on a more liberal and extensive plan. Improvers, conversant in every branch of agricultural employment; with farms worth 100 l or upwards, of yearly rent ; inclosures, green crops, implements of the most approved construction, and labouring cattle of due size and estimation, are what justly entitle them to the appellation of farmers. Their praise would be great indeed, if, by granting longer leases to the tenants, they could persuade them once to begin the business of inclosing, and the culture of waste ground, which cries aloud, and has cried for ages, for the advantages of the spade and the plough. In former times, and even these not, as they are called, are now for the most part converted into money. Unlimited services are no longer exigible. In one half of the parish, two days in spring, and two in harvest, are the stipulated service; nor is this invariably exacted. From the operation of present arrangements, in a very time the other half will be equally free. Emancipation is every where prevailing, and the monster Feudalism is hiding his head in shame.

Black Cattle and Pasturage

Canisbay, notwithstanding its boundless extent of hill pasture, is not to be reckoned a cattle parish. To descend to a particular enumeration, of the horses and black cattle in it, could answer little purpose, when it can be asserted as a fact, that not above one third, of the foals or calves, is reared and brought up in the parish, that are necessary for the culture of the soil. Grass is one of the principal wants we have to complain of. The arable soil is so precious, that the farmer thinks, he could not bear turning any part of it into grass. The want of inclosures and winter herding, precludes him from the advantages of green crops. The best grass farm in the parish lies on the north coast, about an English mile from Dungisbay Head. It is sufficient for the support of 30 cows, and yields butter, which, for colour and quality, is deservedly held in the highest estimation.

Sheep

It is not believed, that the whole sheep in the parish at present exceed 2000. Foxes, dogs, bad seasons, and, above all, the inattention of the owners, are the causes of the diminution of their number, to a third part of what they formerly were. They are far from being of a very good quality, either for wool or mutton ; nor has any attempt been made to meliorate the breed. The parish in general is not naturally possessed of pasturage favourable for the rearing of sheep. There is one place in it, however, that seems to recommend itself for the pasturage of sheep, and for nothing else. This is Dungisbay Head and its environs, which might be adequate to the support of 600 or 700 sheep. The Head itself is every where covered with green to the very brink of the surrounding rock, with an intermixture of short young heath. The situation is dry and the air wholesome.

The Head communicates with the Warth Hill, which would relieve the pasturage occasionally. Upon the whole, it is hardly to be doubted, that sheep would prosper on this pasture, if duly attended to; and it were greatly to be wished, that the proprietor or possessor would make the experiment.

Swine, etc

There is a superabundance of swine throughout the parish ; they are of a small size, fatten well, and their flesh is peculiarly tender and delicate ; but the damage they do, in the winter season, to the grass and corn lands, as they are allowed to roam at large, far exceeds any advantages, that can accrue from the rearing of them. Geese and other poultry are also in great plenty, though not above half the number are reared, since what was payable in kind to the proprietor, has been converted into money.

Coasts –Dungisbay Head, the Berubium Of Ptolemy, is situated in the N.E. corner of the island of Great Britain, where the line of the coast, from a northern direction, turns directly due west, and continues its course, till it reaches Cape Wrath, with little or no variation in its rectilinear direction. This beautiful promontory is of a circular shape, about 2 miles in circumference. Towards the sea, which encompasses two thirds of the Head, it is one continued precipice. On the land side, you descend by a gentle slope into a deep valley, having a small mossy rivulet running through it, which terminates the Head on that quarter. Near the top of the rock, and on that side which faces the Orkneys, there is a vast gulph or cavern, (called, by the neighbouring inhabitants, the Glupe), stretching all around perpendicularly down, till its dusky bottom comes on a level with the sea, with whose waves it holds communication, by an opening at the base of the intervening rock. The bridge betwixt this fearful chasm, and the edge of the main rock, towards the sea, is about six yards wide. On the highest part of the head, about 50 yards from the edge of the precipice, there are to be seen indubitable marks of some house, or mansion, heretofore erected by the hand of man. Its base, which is all that now remains, is perfectly circular, and about 20 feet wide. It has probably been occupied as a watch tower, or place of observation, corresponding with another, the vestiges of which are to be seen on the top of Warth hill, at about the distance of 2 miles.

South from the Head, for about 5 miles, the Warth hill extends its base to the sea brink. The coast is every where exceeding bold, and the wild and varied magnificence of the rocks are peculiarly striking to the eye of a stranger. Beyond, for about a mile, the coast subsides into a beautiful sandy beach winding around the bay, till it reaches the mansion-house of Freswick. Here the coast again resumes its boldness, which continues with little variation, till it reaches the confines of the parish. The lands adjacent to the shore, for the last 3 miles, (a little moor south of Freswick excepted) are all under cultivation. The coast is beautiful ; the soil luxuriant and productive.

The north coast has but little of that stupendous boldness, for which the eastern one is so remarkable. in coming down from the Head, and travelling westward for two miles, the walk is extremely pleasant. The greatest luxuriancy of growth prevails, extending from the shore about a mile inland. The beach itself consists wholly of shells and shell sand, of the purest white, which contribute alike to beautify the coast, and to enrich the soil. In the middle of this delightful walk, you approach the celebrated residence of JOHN O' GROATS; but, although his name be still illustrious, the spot is scarcely distinguishable where he dwelt. .

Westward from the burn of Dungisbay to Huna, moss prevails to the sea brink. From Huna to Gills, is one of the most fertile districts in the parish. The church is situated in the middle of it, on a green rising ground, close by the shore, the manse about about a quarter of a mile inland from the church. Beyond Gills, there is, along the west, a large tract of waste ground, though very capable of cultivation. Mey, part of the property of the Earl of Caithness, terminates the parish on the west. This is an exceeding populous and fertile district there are above 100 families on this part of his Lordship's estate. What he farms himself might rent for about 100 L a-year.

Maritime State - There are no ships belonging to the parish, nor harbours in it to receive them. The bays upon the coast are those of Gills, Dungisbay, and Freswick, in all of which, if the weather be tolerably moderate, vessels can lie in safety, and take in their cargoes ; but, none of them are to be regarded as eligible stations in rough weather. Gills Bay is preferable to the rest.

Kelp and Minerals — The shores of Canisbay are exceeding valuable, yielding about 100 tons of kelp in a favourable season, which is near as much as is made in all of the rest of Caithness. They afford freestone for building, and ware for the land in the greatest abundance. The shell shore of Dungisbay, yields lime of the first estimation for purity and whiteness, and, in some parts of the world, would turn to considerable account to the owner. The adjacent lands are altogether impregnated with the sand of these shells, which gives a peculiar activity and cleanliness to the soil. The superior luxuriancy of the grass in this district, seems wholly owing to the quickening influence of this calcareous manure in its neighbourhood. Near Barrogil Castle, is found a species of coal which emits a hot vivid flame in burning, but without much dissolution of parts, or diminution of size, after it becomes extinct. It is got near the surface of the earth; and, in all probability, coal of a better quality may be found under it ; but, the superabundance of peat fuel, in the mosses of Canisbay, in a great measure supersedes the necessity of digging for it.

Boats and Fishing - There are about 60 boats around the coast, and yet not one man who lives entirely by fishing in the whole parish. Each of these boats is the joint property of, perhaps, 6 or 7 different owners. The fish are divided according to the value of their respective shares in the boat; and, the object of fishing is not sale, but the support of their families. The business of agriculture, from the benignity of the soil, and the number of hands employed, being soon and easily dispatched, they have abundance of leisure every good day to go a fishing. Hence, every farmer in the parish, (the inland estate of Brabster excepted), is a fisherman, and every fisherman a farmer. There is, perhaps, scarce an instance known, of one parishioner ever selling a fish to another. Fish mongers have of late engaged some boats, on the coast, to fish cod and ling at a stipulated value; but as this branch of industry is yet but in its infancy, it merits no particular description on the present occasion. On the north coast, the rapidity of the tides in the Pentland Frith is altogether unfavourable to fishing. In very stormy weather, cod and ling are, by the force of the billows, frequently thrown in alive upon the shore, and taken up by the people, who on these occasions go in quest of them. On the east coast, the same difficulties not occurring, fishing might unquestionably turn to good account, if proper exertions were made, and boats accustomed to make a greater stretch from land, before they dropt their lines. Gray fish, as they are called, of all kinds, abound every where around the coast, and constitute a great part of the sustenance of the inhabitants. The shoal of young fish that pour into every creek and bay, about the beginning of September, are such, that a boll of them may be caught at a few hauls, in the course of one evening. They seem to be the intermingled fry of various genera, and are called by the inhabitants Sellacs. They are tender and delicious in the highest degree, and, in general, between 3 and 4 inches long. While the rapidity of the tides on the north coast is much against the fishing of cod and ling, there is perhaps no station in the world, where a lobster fishing might be more successfully carried on. The bays of Mey, Gills, and Dungisbay, abound in lobsters to a great degree. A few boats at Mey, for the behoof of Messr Selby and Co of London, have been employed for the first time, in this branch of industry, this season; and, from the success they have had, it is to be hoped, this species of fishing will soon become general around the coast.

Church, Schools, and Poor, etc - The session records reach as far back as the restoration, but are not continued down without many gaps and mutilations. The whole inhabitants of the parish profess the religion of the established church, except a few of the Anabaptist persuasion. The first rise of that fact in Caithness was in a part of the parish of Wick, where a gentleman of landed property resided, whose views of religion inclined him to profess and propagate the Anabaptist system; From that district, bordering on Canisbay, it was imported into this parish; It is now greatly on the decline, and never was accompanied with any sort of outrage, wildness, or violence in its professors. The stipend of Canisbay is at present 6 chalders of victual, one half meal, and the other half bear, with 200 merks of money, and the small tithes of the parish, accounted, though not equal to, 200 merks more. Besides the parochial school, there are two society-schools in the parish, with a salary of 10L each. The parochial school may be worth about 18L sterling. The church has very lately received a good repair, and the minister has been extremely well accommodated with new office houses. The manse, unless attended to, will not be of long duration. The glebe is a very small one, and there is little or no grass annexed to it. The poor, from the session funds, and various collections, receive, at annual distributions, about the sum of 10L or 12L Sterling. The indigent are indeed numerous, yet there are few or no strolling beggars in the parish.

The present minister has been 11 years in office, and has not been asked for above half a dozen certificates. in behalf of indigent persons. necessitated to throw themselves upon the alms of the public. The parish, at the same time. comparatively speaking. is far from being a rich one. The sea is its great support, without which, at the rate the lands are rented, it would be impossible for the inhabitants to live. The sea not only supplies them with fish, but with bread also, from the great abundance of tang-manure, which, even, in bad seasons. seldom fails to ensure a crop. It also affords them employment, with suitable wages. during summer, in the manufacture of kelp. A good deal is gained by pilotage and not a little by sea express. From these combined causes. and their being inured from their earliest years to habits of sobriety and temperance, they may be said to live in a state equally removed from want and from abundance.

Dress, Customs, etc - In Canisbay there are no manufactures. Their common apparel is of home growth and texture, generally dyed black. Their dress cloaths are all imported, and in general of better quality, than their circumstances can well afford. Both sexes are alike ambitious to appear fine. Few country congregations are more crowded, or brilliant in the summer season. Meeting for dancing are common in winter. It is then, too, that they generally marry. Their weddings are often crowded ; but the entertainment is always gratuitous. There are annual emigrations from the parish, both of males and females in the menial line, who leave the place of their nativity, in quest of superior wages in the south of Scotland. Many of the young men become soldiers, preferring the land to the sea service. Their character in that capacity has always been to their credit. There are few superstitious usages among them....

No gentleman. however, of the name of SINCLAIR. either in Canisbay or throughout Caithness. will put on green apparel , or think of crossing the Ord upon a Monday. They were dressed in green. and they crossed the Ord upon a Monday. in their way to the battle of Flowden. where they fought and fell in the service of their country, almost without leaving a representative of the name behind them. The day and the dress are accordingly regarded as inauspicious. If the Ord must be got beyond on Monday. the journey is performed by sea. A superstition thus derived from the heroism of their ancestors, and so well calculated to excite a similar spirit in their offspring. philosophy itself will allow to be preserved from oblivion.

Ghosts and fairies are believed to manifest themselves occasionally. There are three popish chapels mouldering into desolation in the parish, one at Freswick, another at Brabster, and a third at St John's Head. Some superstitious rites, now in total disuse, were wont to be performed, by the ignorant vulgar, on particular days, at these sanctified ruins. At present, not a vestige of popery seems to intermingle in the creed of the people. There are no wells of preternatural efficacy in the parish. There is no day in the year accounted inauspicious, or, (Sundays excepted) held in higher estimation than another.

Ghosts and fairies are believed to manifest themselves occasionally. Some superstitious rites, now in total disuse, were wont to be performed, by the ignorant vulgar, on particular days, at these sanctified ruins. At present, not a vestige of popery seems to intermingle in the creed of the people. There are no wells of preternatural efficacy in the parish. There is no day in the year accounted inauspicious, or, (Sundays excepted) held in higher estimation than another.

Character - In point of stature, there are few of the inhabitants either much above or below the middle size.

Being seldom employed in any sort of labour, whose progress from its difficulty is necessarily slow, and equal, if not superior, to every task incumbent on them to accomplish, they often manifest the greatest activity, alertness and dispatch. Hence, while occupied in walking, or speaking, their motion and their utterance is rather quick than flow. This may be partly owing to their living so much at sea, where the greatest possible dispatch is so often necessary. The climate, with a train of local circumstances, serves to give a particular activity to the blood and spirits of the inhabitants of the north. Notwithstanding this alertness and promptitude in all their operations, unless impelled to action from necessity, or the excitement of some particular interest they have in view, there are no people in the world fonder of doing nothing. During their hours of idleness, which are many, languor and lassitude are never observable about them. The mind, having no interests of its own to fasten upon, exerts its power, for the sake of employment, in making investigations into the condition and character of others. Hence that solicitude after news, that spirit for prying into the most hidden concerns of their neighbours, with the view of gratifying curiosity rather than malevolence; and hence also, a more enlarged knowledge of their country, and a more extensive acquaintance and correspondence with one another, that obtains among the peasantry of any other part of Great Britain. In the presence of their superiors, their self-possession, recollection and faculty of utterance never deserts them. Their discernment of the purposes of others, and dexterity in concealing their own, are no less remarkable. What a pity such respectable endowments, should be left to waste themselves on objects, neither of public utility nor of private emolument. Were they properly called forth, and engaged in branches of commendable industry, the gain would be great indeed, both to themselves and to their country.

Antiquities and Natural Curiosities - Houses, said to have belonged to the Picts, though in no respect remarkable, except for their antiquity, are to be seen in different parts of the parish. The prospect from Dungisbay Head, may be well reckoned a curiosity of the first distinction of its kind. It commands the whole of the Pentland Frith, and as far beyond it as the eye can stretch. The Orkney Isles appear spread out in that happy point of vision, in which such objects are contemplated with the greatest pleasure and delight. The German Ocean to a great extent, the Murray Frith, and the hills of Banff, Aberdeen, and Murrayshire, are all under view. No traveller, when he comes to John O' Groats, will repent a visit to the Head. The Stalks of Dungisbay, as they are called, are two pyramidal pillars of naked freestone-rock. They rear their fantastic summits a great way into the air, and strike the eye of a stranger in approaching them, as the huge spires of some old magnificent Gothic pile. They are frequented in summer by innumerable sea fowls, who hatch and bring forth their young about their sides, while the eagle fits in royalty upon their summits. Near to St John's Head, upon the north coast, is one of the pleasantest spots in the whole parish. It affords evident tokens, of having been, in former ages, a residence of great respectability; from a burying ground, and the vestiges of an old chapel in the neighbourhood, now in total ruins as well as from the name it bears, it would seem to have been consecrated to religious purposes. From the vestiges of a ditch and draw-bridge, defending it on the land side, it must have been occupied as a place of strength and security; but, whether it has been the residence of saints or heroes, it affords ample proof, that neither taste nor judgement were wanting, in the choice of it as an habitation. The decorations of art are alone wanting to render it one of the loveliest spots in Caithness. In the burn of Stempster, is found white spar of the purest quality. When put into the fire, a very slight degree of heat makes it throw out a considerable portion of phosphoric light, which gradually decays as the stone cools, and it is again recruited as the stone is heated a-new. When reduced to a powder, it puts on an exceeding brilliant and beautiful appearance during ignition. In electrical experiments, it is a non-conductor, nor does it seem soluble in acids. About a quarter of a mile east from the church, there are 2 springs of fresh water, at least 30 yards within the flood mark. Betwixt Brabster and Freswick there is a deep hollow, called, in the dialect of the parish, the Wolf's Ego, which must have derived its name from being the haunt of wolves in former times. There are other circumstances handed down by tradition, which tend to prove, that this ravenous animal was once an inhabitant of Canisbay.

Wild Animals - The quadrupeds are foxes, hares, otters and weasels. Adders are sometimes found in the mosses, but they are not numerous. In the links of Freswick, Dungisbay and Huna, there are plenty of rabbits, but they turn to little account. There are also moor-fowl, plovers, snipes, some partridges, and multitudes of wild pigeons in the rocks. Birds of passage are, the green plover, wild goose, snow-fowl, wagtail, swallow and rail. The snow-fowl, in the winter, are inconceivably numerous. The hills are exceedingly well flocked with the moor game above mentioned. The coasts, throughout the year, abound in multitudes of sea-fowl. In the summer months, the swarms of scarfs, marrots, saiks etc that come to hatch in the rocks of Dungisbay and Stroma, are prodigious. They in a manner darken the air, when, on any sudden alarm, they take wing in a body from their nests. The gun makes frequent and bloody havock among them. They are shot for amusement from boats, and the common people appropriate their flesh and feathers to their own use. The sport is cruel and unprofitable, as numbers die upon their young in the nest, or expire before they reach the edge of the projecting shelfe.

Planting - There is no planting in the parish. A good many years ago, an experiment was made on a part of the Warth Hill. A few acres were planted with firs. They throve very well while young ; but the fence being insufficient, and soon mouldering away, and the plantation exposed to all possible injury, the whole perished, and at present no vestige of it is to be seen. The spot was well chosen, and had the plantation been attended to, there is hardly a doubt, but that it would have prospered. No charge ought to be brought against the soil and climate, as long as the exertions of industry are wanting to overcome the obstacles complained of Without a suitable choice of ground, both as to soil and shelter, and without proper inclosures, what success can or ought to be expected? The burns of Freswick, of Dungisbay, and the winding braes of Gills, where, in defiance of the depredations, both of man and beast, some natural brush-wood maintains its residence, seem to claim a preference in experiments of this sort.

Road, Inns, Traffic, etc - The public roads in the parish are those leading from Huna to Wick and Thurso, both lying along the coast, the one in a southerly, and the other in a westerly direction. They have never been completed, and are very uncomfortable in the winter. A third from Huna, leading into the middle of the country by Brabster, would be a great conveniency to other parishes, as well as to Canisbay. Tippling houses are by far too numerous in the parish ; They have undoubtedly a bad influence on the industry, as well as morals of the people. Three, besides the ferry houses, are all that ought to be allowed. From Huna, the ferry boat crosses with the mails for Orkney once a week. From Burwick in South Ronaldshay, the Orkney mails in like manner cross to Huna. The distance there, being the shortest betwixt Caithness and Orkney, is reckoned 4 leagues in extent. if a passenger goes along with the mails, the freight is ~s. ; but if he hires the ferry boat for himself, it is 7s. Although the Pentland Frith may be deservedly accounted the most tempestuous piece of sea, around the island of Britain, it is remarkable how few accidents happen in crossing it ; but the danger it threatens, suggests the means of preventing it. The time of tide is observed to a minute, in putting out to sea. The boats are strong and of good construction ; the boatmen perfect masters of their business, and acquainted from their infancy with every circumstance, respecting the variation of the tides they have to go through. In the summer season, there is almost a continued communication betwixt Caithness and Orkney, in the traffic of horses. Colts from the highlands of Caithness, from Sutherland and Strathnaver are sold to Orkney; and these very colts, when past their prime, are again brought from Orkney,' and re-imported into Caithness. By far the greatest number of these cross to and from the shores of Canisbay, on account of the shortness of the passage. Large boats are made for transporting them ; and the freic-ht of each colt is 1s., and a full grown horse 1s Sd. to the nearest land. There are 2 petty markets in the parish, in the course of a year, one in December, and the other in February".
